THE LONGING.

- PROUDENT STREET, From our this dim and gloomy hollow,
 Where hang the cold clouds benyily,
 Could I hat gain the clouds to relieve,
 How these of would the lourney be!
 Alert I see a fair dominion.
 Through time and change all vernal still;
 But where the power, and what the pinion.
 To read the control the pinion.
- to gain the ever blooming hill? Afte I bear the mosic ringing-
- For the fields that fade not, sweet to fice feet the soul within me shiver. To gaze upon the plonny waves.

THE LITTLE BEROINE.

BY MRS. CARDI INE SOULE.

"Morning again!" and the weary, wash invalid lifted his head from the pillow and looked diffully over the dim room. "Oh, that the night ad been longer! To the wretched sleep is des My poor, poor wife-my darling hables-nin freeze and starve! Ob, God! it is b much." And with tears gushing from his eyes the pale man buried his head in the scanty covering and grouned aloud.

I was no wonder that he was out of heart o that cold, dark December day. At best, he had a hard struggle to get food, and for the past six months the struggle lead licen almost desperate for his wife had been unable to assist him in the least, being confined to her hed with a slow. nesting disease. His little daughter, Marie, erself and two little brothers like wax. By the aid of her mother's whispered directions sho also managed to cook the scanty meals, and also anaged to do up the weekly washing and iren-'My little sunbeam," the father foudly called and put them to bed, and tied on her clock to go or him. A crowd met her at the very threshold Wish a wild cry, she rushed toward the maninote form they carried upon a board. It was er father, brought home to them with a broken |. A week had passed since this misfortune. By a sale of their few pieces of furniture, the wolf had been kept from the door. But now nothing remained save the coarse bed on which the distressed ones slept. No coal for the little grate: no tea for the feverish lips; no ernsts for the the sick father's hand, min and again, as they lay there watching the waiting upon the customers. Perhaps they would try her. "It they only would," she house to into court and tell the same story normal sofile. "I am handy, quick, and patient, I would try so hard to blige."
